Sarah Booth Delaney is helping her fiancé, Graf, recover from a gunshot wound during a week's vacation on Dauphin Island off the Gulf Coast. Graf does not seem to want much from her, though, as he keeps asking for time to consider his future acting jobs and their marriage. A local woman asks Sarah for help finding out who really murdered her father (she believes the man in prison for the crime is innocent). The case looks airtight, but early on, client Angela is threatened. Throughout the investigation, Sarah is visited often by family haunt Jitty, in various guises, offering her typically confusing advice. A scratched spyglass, a tragic legend, and a whole lot of greed come together, all while a hurricane threatens to hit the area. The domestic issues with Graf and Sarah and the many scenes with Jitty move in surprising directions, but these side trips slow down the plot throughout an otherwise entertaining mystery. Fans of G. A. McKevett may also enjoy this series. --Amy Alessio
