Editorial Review

Review

"It's not overstatement: every (yes, every) child can be a self-propelled super reader. Allyn and Morrell provide you with the tips to turn your kids into readers for life. Hint: It involves great books!"

—James Patterson

"We know that it is essential to teach students reading knowledge, skills, and strategies explicitly, but too often we forget that it is also essential to develop students' curiosity, compassion, courage, and other personal and social values. Allyn and Morrell remind us of this quite powerfully, with many concrete practices we can use in and outside of classrooms. Learn how powerful readers—and reading education—can become."

—Nell K. Duke, University of Michigan

"This remarkable book is an impassioned invocation to believe that every child can become not just a reader, but a super reader who can change the world through literacy. Pam Allyn and Ernest Morrell take us on a walk through seven core strengths that can open the world of possible for all children."

— Georgia Heard

"Two of the field's most respected literacy educators introduce the concept of 'super reader,' a concept that needs to become part of our societal nomenclature. Their book contains kernels of wisdom for educators—guiding lights as we construct a world in which reading and young readers are deeply valued. The ultimate benefit is the potential kinship and connection that will be forged between those who teach reading and the children who will discover the power and promise of reading."

—Alfred W. Tatum

Dean, University of Illinois at Chicago, College of Education
