Sport of Kings: a Memoirs of a Gigolo story By Livia Ellis

Alejandro, a young Argentinean polo player, finds the sultry hot first love he's longed for in the cold Russian winter. When he travels to Saint Petersburg to join a private polo team, he meets Marcus, the American coach whose graceless charm is the perfect complement to his refinement. Alejandro's first sexual experience is a first in another way for Marcus; for once, he's with a man he doesn't automatically eject from his life. Alejandro isn't the only one to fall in love for the first time after their long weekend together snowed in. Before Marcus realizes it, he's in just the sort of relationship he never wanted, and it scares him. World weary and bored, Marcus falls for the younger Alejandro utterly and completely. Then he discovers with love comes insecurity, jealousy, and fear. Only when it might be too late does Marcus realize to love someone utterly, it is also necessary to trust them completely.

Editorial Review

About the Author

Livia Ellis is blond with blue eyes and comments that she only runs if a gun-wielding maniac is chasing her. She is a lover of yoga and a bit of a shoe hound and says she may have had issues passing up handbags. Currently, she is trying to learn to play the Irish harp. She enjoys both theater and concerts, as well as reading fantasy and science fiction. She admits she adores Star Trek and has a picture of herself (dressed as a nun) and the late Patrick Swayze (dressed as a medieval warrior) in a frame (yes - she did cry when he died).

Ellis describes herself as a perpetual student with a vivid imagination although she admits that she is only sexually adventurous on paper. She says she never knows what to say when people end a conversation with 'god bless.' Ellis occasionally plays the lottery - but generally only when she's feeling really poor. She loves to travel and speaks French fluently. She is always happy to find readers who enjoy what she writes.
